Safeguarding and Wellbeing

Barriers to Child Abuse Disclosures - SecEd

Educational staff are under a duty to highlight child abuse when they believe it has occurred. A real problem in executing this duty though, lies with the fact that children often do not want to disclose what is going on to those who can help. Through mistrust of adults or fear of consequences of disclosure, getting to that stage is the central barrier to preventing it and treating it. Sec-Ed has published an article identifying twelve barriers to disclosure among children. This was based on research derived from the University of Bedfordshire after a study of 43 papers and reviews. If interested please follow the link below:
